

You go 'bout a mile and a half west of (not clear) .

(Yeah, that's right. Yeah, now up on Grand River, there are a lot of Indians up there dig up black snake root for medicine.)

Yeah.

(I see, they use it for a lots of different thing, that blacksnake root.

And it's good to, I use it myself. They mix that backsnake root tea and sassafras, together. And it's pretty good.)

It's pretty good like that.

(Yeah, it's good, I like that kind.)

Make good tea.

(Yeah, it makes good tea. And then, when we got stomach trouble we make tea out of blackberry juice. And that's good. I had a toothache last week, and I chew this blacklocust root.)

You did!

(And it went away.)

Yeah, I think it's really good, I went down to Porter and bought (not clear) you know.

(Yeah, I got an old Indian friend that lives over there, that lives over there by the river. When it gets toothache, he always chews hickory bark.)

He does.

(Hickory bark. And everytime, he says it makes it well. I haven't tried it, but I'll remember it tho. You know the brush arbor, like they building right there, it sure is nice.)

BRUSH ARBOR AND CAMP

Yeah.

(We're gonna build one, too.)
