

But in all fields competitively with the Anglo they going right abreast with them.)

Oh yes, take me now, my sister when I use to go visit my sister in Tulsa. Well, she married a white man, and set my little niece on my knee. She's white headed and green eyes, and look at me. Her uncle.

(Nothing wrong, of course. No!)

It's just so much, it's just so much fade in there.

(That's right.)

I think it's leaving. Well, I think it's a sad thing and yet it could be a wonderful thing both. It's both. It's civilization that's drawing the redman, completely into extinction.

(Yes, I believe, the time will come when there will be no redman, and there will be no whiteman as say. Either it will be color of all nationality, all become one race. I don't know what it will be.)

I imagine that time our technology will be so advanced. I don't believe I want to exist.

The end of this interview.