

Jordan: Do you think that would work?

INDIANS IN JAIL WORK FOR CITY

Irene: I think it would. Because we have some men in there that knows.

You see lot of these Indian boys working. They get thrown in jail and they do all that work over there for the city of Anadarko.

Roberta: They can work and they don't know it, ain't it?

Irene: They can work. Because Blackie went and worked for the city all last two or three years. He even washed the police cars and he chopped their gardens for them. That's what he did. And he can't do that at his own home. I don't know why.

Birdie: Just pays to work for the city!

Irene: That's what we said--he works for the city. And they take a whole truckload to where that fairground is and they paint and they fix those benches and they fix those fences and they do a lot of work for the city. And then when they get home they can't do anything. What they do is just get drunk when they go home.

Birdie: Is that what you all are going to do--try to get this project going?
