

(Yeah.)

So, they set--grandmother's brother and her sister's brother, they stayed there, oh, they stayed there until noon. See smoke down there. They went down, there, and looked all around there. And grandma says they see stuff scattered around there. And the other things they see there. They found a dutch oven and they found what they call kettles. And they saw bunch of 'em, but they only got that much. So, they got it and took it to their--took it home.

And they told all about--told what they done down there--tell what to depend on different tribe, who done that. So, they other--this is one kind or another said, "We got this one down and so they put it down. They--and they told them to pick what they want. Grandma, she picked up a kettle. Another one picked up a dutch oven. So, her mother's grandma used that--what you cook with, cook soup, cook beans. When she died, her mother got it. She used it herself with her first husband. She was married twice you know. First husband used that to cook out with her. When he died, she married father. She used that, and when she (not clear), why she used that. Then, it got so after (not clear)--

(Well.)

Before she died, Silas wanted it and she didn't want us to quarrel. She told him, "I'm going to give your brother." She give to me and I give to my daughter. She's got it down there now. That's old. I guess, over pretty near two hundred years old. I told my daughter to be careful and don't lose that thing. I told her, don't ever sell it or nothing. She got it down there now. Got lots of history.

(Yeah, I guess that old pot cooked a lot of meals, for a lot of people, for many years.)

She did (not clear).

(Yeah, they didn't know what tribe that was?)

Oh, no, there was two different tribes. We was camped down there. And the ones that fought, they don't know who it was. That's the way they used to do
