

come out of the classrooms, you know, and just like that, and had to make call for those dances. And I didn't know what's going to happen in a few days. Next Saturday when I go to dining hall, you know, I'd be waiting. I was standing there waiting for them students to get in. They'd ask me, "Albert, are they doing to have a dance tonight? Is there going to be a dance?" just like that, you know. (Laughter) I didn't know, I don't know what's going to happen.

(You was right like a newspaper up there.)

Yeah.

(Bulletin board.)

Mmm-hmmm. Bulletin board, yeah, information. Yeah, they just ask me if they're going to dance. And I'd tell them, "Yeah, yeah, yeah, and then they..."

(Did they have that, some of them, these student were up there at the time, they tried to satisfy them, but seemed like some of them still wouldn't hardly, didn't like it up there. Did they ever have any kind of Indian doings up there?)

Huh-uh.

(You didn't? They left that out?)

They left that out entirely. See, they make fun of one another when they go like that them days. And if you talk Indian, they make fun of you. Yeah, that's why I say we can't talk, Poncas get together, you know, some other tribe around them we don't talk about them. See they make fun of you. They make fun of your blankets and everything, see? And they, and that's the different, see, all going back to the blanket now. (Laughter)

(Yeah, they want you to learn how to talk. They want you to learn how to go back to the old customs.)
