

They had grandfathers, you know, and his brother was going to be his grandfather, and he don't want to have his brother for grandfather.

(When was that?)

Oh, I think it was 1926 (?) when they had it over here. They had it over there in nineteen-twenty, I think, at night. I come. I know the years because one of my boys was born in nineteen-thirty--nineteen-fif---it was was about nineteen-fourteen when they had it down there. Because I had Hannibal next year in nineteen-fifteen.

CREEK IN CANTON PARK AND RABBIT DANCE

--and this creek (in Canton Park) come up and my boy, his name was Hannibal, "Oh, my goodness," he said, "Look at Minnie-Ha-Ha,--Minnie-Ha-Ha Creek." And they been calling it Minnie-Ha-Ha ever since. He's the one give that creek the name. Yeah. He used to call it Minnie-Ha-Ha Creek. Everybody's been calling it Minnie-Ha-Ha since then.

(You said there sed to be a camp there?)

Yeah, we used to camp over here (where Canton city park is now). Big camp. Used to have Rabbit Dances and stuff like that. My boys used to run Rabbit Dances.

(What is the Rabbit Dance?)

Oh, they dance Rabbit--just like that Indian Two-Two-Step, they call it. My boys used to run that Rabbit Dance.

(Would boys and girls dance together?)

Boy and a girl, boy and a girl. They used to call it "Rabbit Dance," but these, they call it "Indian Two-Step."

(Have they been doing that very long?)

Yeah, Rabbit Dance was long time ago. They have fair at Fort Reno and that's all we danced was Rabbit Dance. I was a little younger then.
