

got that oil lease up there just north of the cemetery. And so, Charlie, he claimed he was trying to get them a coming to drill a well line, you know. And it drug on for a couple -- three years. And so, Saul and Carl, they got tired of fooling with it and give their interest in it to old Charlie /laughter/. Old Charlie got possession--their interest in it. By the way, he had old Jim Higgins and Finance Oil Company come in there and drill this well on this hedge. /laughter/ So, come in and a hundred barrels, you know, after Carl and Saul out of that part of it, you see? /laughter/ He, he got a lease up here by Wynona and got some oils drilled on it and they all come in big. Well, he thought he was a big shot oil man then, you know. So, he joined up with Josh Carson, Carson Oil Company then, he got it, you know. And they all--they was the one that built that bigger refinery at Tulsa, you know, called an oil company. And so, Charlie thought he'd go fast, you know. He got in Josh Collins. Josh Collins got to playing stock market up there and went broke, flat. And would have broke Charlie flat, but Charlie had this little lease up there at Wynona that he hadn't combine with the Collins, you know. And he had that to go with, staking. And so, he organized Peters Oil Company and hired old Jim Higgins away from the Finance people to go in with him, you know. And Jim, he was an oil man for soles of his shoes up, you know. So, they bought that Exchange National Bank building down at Tulsa, and Charlie went out there and bought that Harry Sinclair home. And so, they just went to town right now, you know. And after he got lease from Josh Collins, /laughter/.

('Bout--Josh about took him down with him, didn't he?) /laughter/
Yeah. And so, he got pretty big. Last time I seen Charlie, he'd had--cancer took off side of his face, and boy, he just had one side to his face, that side on up. Had to wear plaster, you know,
