

Jordan: What do you mean--?

Birdie: Two hundred a year.

Jordan: What's that for?

Birdie: Lease. Lease money. It's leased out. To Alva B. Symmes now. And Joe McKnight. He's on this forty and this forty.

Jordan: So they're both leasing from you?

Birdie: Yes. That's Clara's and Lillie's on that side (they're sisters of Ray Blackbear and their land adjoins Rays on the north.) That's Lillie's and this is Clara's. This is mine right here. This is the one Alva B.'s got.

Irene: Alva B. rents this place and Joe McKnight rents Lillie and Clara's land.

Birdie: And Johnson's right in the middle.

Irene: Johnson Smith (an old Kiowa-Apache man).

Jordan: (to Henderson and Davis) Do you have anything to ask--some questions?

Henderson: I'd like to ask Irene how she likes living in town. Would you rather be living in town?

Irene: It's more convenient for me because of my loan and I have those two children--grandkids--and my boy like it out there (in the country). I'm satisfied where I'm living--(on east Main street in Anadarko) but my brother--every now and then he kind of give us a little hard time. (Clarence Chalepah, the youngest brother, gets drunk occasionally and bothers Gertie and Irene.) I just wanted to build me a three bedroom house right there and live there. Just so I could be in town. And send the girl (Carol Poolaw, Muggs' girl) to school. Town school. But here I probably would have to take her to school every morning and pick her up. There I wouldn't have to worry about her too much, in town. I'd much rather live out there. I thought it over. I wanted to move back out here with them. But still, you know, I'd be there with them myself, but my boy likes that place and I'd just much rather go ahead and deed him
