

Birdie: No. I think she passed away before the time was for that Indian money. And so after that's paid, then I'll be drawing that two hundred.

Jordan: How much was that Indian money?

Irene: Four hundred and ninety-seven dollars.

Jordan: Apiece?

Roberta: No--

Birdie: Four hundred. No--three ninety-five.

Irene: Three ninety-seven.

Birdie: Three something--

Roberta: It was almost four hundred dollars.

Birdie: Yeah--three ninety-eight.

Irene: Three ninety-seven.

Jordan: When did it come?

Birdie: Last year--I remember last year, March 29, that was the day Sandra got married (her niece). We didn't have no money to buy clothes to go to her wedding. Jack hurt his pants when he was working. We spend all his Indian money on new clothes! He said, "Next time anybody get married, don't invite me!" We spend all of it on clothes, you know. She had a big wedding down here, you know. Paul's girl. (Birdie's brother's daughter)

Jordan: And you all spent your Indian money on remodelling this house?

Birdie: On the house. Yeah. We didn't even get a car. Even when our old car just about fold up with us, you know. We had it repaired. We just use it on this house and we lived on it, and that's all.

Jordan: What about the girls--how did their money go?

Birdie: Our girls? We got it all in one lump sum--the girls and Patrick and Jack and I got it all together. That's what we were using.

Jordan: Well, how much was the funeral bill for your mother and father?

Birdie: It was nineteen hundred. All of it together. And I think most of it's
