

through here in this part of Sequoyah county.)

Well, pretty much.

(How far are you from the river now?)

From the creek. We was on the big Salisaw creek. I guess it's about a mile the way you have to wind around to get down there to the falls.

(Yeah.)

On the creek.

(And the Washita River is on further south?)

Uh-huh.

(I guess you remember when they used to have boats on the river then?)

Well, no, not--I wasn't close enough to the river. I don't remember.

(I see. Well, has this been farming country through here?)

Oh, yeah. Every foot of it.

(Well. You don't see many farms anymore.)

No. Not now.

(This land here, this pasture land.)

And it's just sliced and cut up. What I got out there for instance used to be just as level as that road.

(Yeah.)

Raise good cotton and corn out there, but now you can't--ain't nothing but Bermuda grass.

(Yes ma'm.)

And it's just the same all the way around. Everything's in pasture now.

HORN SCHOOL-SHILOH SCHOOL AND CEMETERY

(Yeah. That's the way it is in most places too. The old Horn school, it came into being after Harrison school, didn't it?)

Well, I don't know it rightly. But it was long about the same time, I imagine. And then there was Shiloh. Shiloh school over here across the
