

(Yeah.)

And there used to be a post office up here. Harrison Post Office.

(Well, that's interesting. When was this--What years was this in the operation?)

Well, it must have been, I guess, well it was in 1911. It might have went on a little longer than that.

(Yeah.)

And started before that.

(Was Mr. Harrison the postmaster too?)

Uh-huh.

(What was his first name?)

J. J. Harrison.

(J. J.)

The mail was brought out from town in a buggy. Horse and buggy.

(Yeah.)

And brought out to the post office up here. Then he'd gather the mail and take it back.

(You know I think some of these younger generation of kids and people, they've missed a whole lot by not having lived in those days. 'Cause they'll never see things that we've seen. I can remember when they used to have a mail hack. They called it. Way when we were living up in the country there. Oh, we'd watch for that mail hack. We could see for three or four miles seem like. We'd see a cloud of dust along about two o'clock in the afternoon. We knew that was the mail hack. We lived about a quarter of a mile from the section line. Boy, he'd stop at that mail box us kids would beat it up there to see what was that mail.)

That's the way we was then.. We had to be up here to the corner and get out mail. And this mailman he had a two-horse buggy. I don't know what
