Unidentified speaker: It was in the fall.

(Yeah.)

ALLOTMENTS

Mrs. Vowel: And they had to spend the winter on the east side of the river.

They didn't get to go across the river and go on up the bluff where

Kansas City is. They stayed down on the Missouri side. Which is the Missouri side now. Which wasn't--I don't know whether it was then or not. I guess it was because it was--I don't know when Missouri was adopted as Missouri. But it was on that side. Down on the side of the river.

Sentence not clear--much static.

Each little one in the family got forty. My mother had forty. My father had two twenties. Bert had forty. They always had, you know, the different ones on. Well, in the funny part of it is the eldest--course each children around there had 20 (acres). (Not clear)...all around. My dad bought it back. My dad was white...Mr. Elliot. Then my husband turn around and bought it back.

(Was that country fairly well settled up at one time in earlier days? I mean were there a lot of people living in--?)

No. There wasn't. 'Cause I've heard--

(In that part of the Wyandotte Nation?)

No. I've heard my husband tell about his grandmother, his father told him. The story he told him, he rode a horse. Have to ride for miles down an old trail to go to a lady's house whose name was (sentence not clear).

Unidentified speaker: My father-in-law, Mr. Elliot, said his mother put him on this old horse and they'd go for miles down to Mrs. Sarah's house.

(Yeah.)
