

And they help stir it half the time. Now, you know, O'Hara, the mayor down here. Southwest City. That's what she does. She thinks she's quite a girl. She is. She's trying to help the tribe. White people indulge this. I have a deed here if you'd like to look at it on--
(I think that would be most interesting to see.)

Mrs. Vowel: One of 'em isn't--but one is (word not clear). It was my father's--my husband's mother-in-law. My mother's step-mother. She was my mother-in-law. We lived on her land. But it's right across from his allotment. Right down on the road.

(Yes.)

His allotment is this place down here where the Rams live.

(Yes ma'm.)

That is where he was--

(Well.)

Born. Now he was born in Kansas City before they moved down here. And it's his things, his papers and his writings and his books and his keepsakes and his personal letters and things that I'm hoarding.

(Oh my goodness, isn't that wonderful.)

Now, I know.

Unidentified speaker: Aunty's got some--

(Well, she must have.)

Static on tape.

Mrs. Vowel: This is it, but--so I thought maybe you might be interested.

(Well certainly.)

It's all a mess, but I have to keep holding on to it. Now that's the way was when I got it.
