

others that, too--what if you were talking about all of them?)

nei.nw.nw

(Did you ever call them by their name? Like Lydia, did you ever call her by her name?)

Sometimes I used to call her name.

(But most of the time how would you--?)

nw'w

(O.K. And if you're talking about her to someone else and maybe some of these others you call her neinw are around, too, is there any way you can make it clear which one you're talking about?)

It just be neinw -- say her name.

(And what about Lydia's children--the boys--what would you call them if you're talking right to them?)

Well, it's just all the same--you know, white people, they say "my cousins," but it's just all the way through the same. They're my brother's.

(I see. That would be Angus and Chester?)

Yeah. See, I was older. I would say naehaebaehae' -- naehaewwhw'w' -- both of them.

(Would you say the first one again?)

naehae.baehae'

(And the second one?)

Both of them-- nwhw'whw'w'

(That means two brothers, both of them younger than you are?)

Yeah.

(What if one was older and one was younger than you?)

I would have to say nae.sae'hae'

(Again?)
