

(Several Gourd Dance songs. Then stop.)

Saul: At this time I want to make this announcement. A memorial song will be sung for Gertrude Gould, deceased, Jewell White Plume, Senior, I think it is---William Redcherries, Glen Lumpmouth, Susie Blackman. Now all of these were living last pow-wow, and since then they passed away, and we're asking the parties that are interested and the families whatever they are going to do in regards to that memorial song--we are asking each individual to make themselves available when the song is being sung. We are combining the whole group in order to try to complete whatever they want to do before the flag is lowered. If one of these are your relatives and you want to do something on their behalf, you have that privilege. So we going to ask the drummers to go on with the Gourd Clan two or three more songs, giving you a privilege to make your preparation when the memorial song is being sung. Instead of individually, we are combining the five that I mentioned. Take it away, drummers. We go on with the Gourd Clan for two or three more songs, giving the parties the privilege to get themselves ready. If they want to give away on their behalf, this is the time. There will be no specials on the night program tonight or tomorrow night.

(Gourd Dance songs)

Saul: All right, here goes now. I've already stated a memorial song for Gertrude Gould, Jewell White Plume, William Redcherries, Glen Lumpmouth and Susie Blackman--this song will be sung by the drummers, and if anyone wants to honor the deceased mentioned, they have that privilege at this time. Take it away drummers. And step forward so you will be recognized and given your privilege, that you understand what has been said. (Song begins)

Let's everybody stand please. (Families and friends of the deceased dance in processional. Dance in separate groups, according to which person they
