

Mountain. Quite a few of em was going to school. They have their, they used to have their own tournament. Ball games and basketball games, my sister played basketball but I never did. They had volley ball. They had tournament at Anadarko, and that's where they used to go down there.

(In the tournament did you ever play any non-Indian schools?)

No, I didn't. Just passed away time at the school. We play tennis, me and one of my girl friends, that's just about all. But as far as playing basketball or softball or anything, well we, I never did. We just passed away time when we are off from work in the evenings, but we have to get permission from the employer before we go play tennis. But there's always got to be somebody setting there there and watch us because they don't allow us to talk to boys or they don't want the boys to come over and talk to the girls.

(Not even during the games?)

Well, during the game they can talk but seem slike they really watch us real close.

(Were there any differences in the punishment given to the boys or would you know?)

Well, I don't, don't know much about the boys, but ah, since I been in the girls school then I know just how they punish us. The girls. Although I never did get punished, only time, just like I said when they catch us talking Kiowa. They want us to talk English. They always tell us they gonna wash our mouth with soap too when they catch us talking Kiowa. Before we ever know it a matron will walk in when we talking. And it's funny we got a big basement room where we got all our big, each girls got a trunk bout as big as that one sitting right there. (Points to medium sized fashioned trunk.) And we carry our own blankets ah, this beaver state blankets that our folks brings us. And we keep all our own things in trunks and ah, and nobody gets in there to pick up anything that that don't belongs to em. And talk about how many girls there are I couldn't say about how many girls there was, and ah, never a time that anybody lost anything in there that I remember of. Never did. And now you can't hardly trust
