

(Did Tommy used to pay his father-in-law or mother-in-law anything--like room and board?)

No, they don't pay. They don't charge them nothing. Of course as long as he was working he was furnishing the eats. He used to buy groceries.

(How did he get along with his mother-in-law and father-in-law?)
All right. It was his wife--she didn't want to get out and try to make a living.

(Was it ever any problem for him to be living in the same house with his mother-in-law?)

No. It didn't bother them, I don't think.

(Did they talk to each other?)

No, they're not supposed to talk to their mother-in-laws. He talked to his brother-in-laws and his wife and father-in-law--that's all.

(Would they eat together--all sit down at the same table?)

Yeah, they all sat together at the table.

(Did your son and his wife have their own room?)

Yeah, they had one room. They had one room and their mother-in-law had one room, and the boys had one room, and they had a kitchen and a living room. They had a big house.

(Did Tommy and his wife have any furniture of their own?)

Yeah, they had furniture. They had dressers, and little tables and things like that--chairs.

(What about Imogene--when she got married where did they live?)

Right here in that house.

(What year did Imogene get married?)

Oh, I wouldn't even know. I don't know.

(How old is her oldest boy, Dennis?)

He's going to be twenty-two next September.

(Was she married before your husband passed away?)

No. After.

(At the time he passed away, how many of your kids were still with you?)

Let's see--Tommy and Rosie--five--Imogene, and Cordelia and Carol Lee. We were living here but Cordelia was at Longdale and Rosie at Eagle City. They were both married. And Tommy
