

Yeah. Yeah, he was studying the Language. And you know that John Goggles, there was some words where he told him and they were not the right way of using them, so we changed them. And he said, "Oh, I ought to see John about this," he said. "I paid him money and help him every way, and for him to--" Some places, you know--it was just like making fun. Yeah. That word he had. It was this Arapaho talk, you know--if you say, "Get me that one" and things like that--anything. And "Who is that one" and "Who's coming" and "Who's going"--things like that. Just the way you would talk to a person. That's what he was learning. But in placed he had put funny--(laughs) No, it wasn't right. And then in one place he told him something about horses. And at the last he said, "He's a white man--he won't know it." That's what he had on there--in Arapaho! "He's a white man--he won't know it." He said it, after he told him. (Did you ever know this John Goggles yourself?)

Yeah. I always see him.

(Does he ever come to Oklahoma?)

He was here last pow-wow. Just a short, short fellow, but he's hard of hearing. You have to talk loud to him. He come to my shade. "I come visit you," he said. "Sit down. You're welcome," I told him. And then he start telling me about Wyoming, you know--troubles. Killing and everything. Who ~~and~~ had passed away. He was just telling me, you know. And this Madiline, she come and of course she knocked everything up. She start talking and just out-talk him! Oh, she's awful. Maybe some white people are that way! I know one Kiowa woman told me, "That woman over there, if she talks to you, don't talk to her. Because she talks too much!" Just that way, you know. Everybody knows this.

(Was he talking about troubles they've had just this past year up there?)

He was just telling me, he said, "That boy got killed, and that girl got killed, and they had a fight, and oh, some divorces and stuff like that.

(Among the Wyoming Arapahoes?)

Yeah.

(Have you ever been up there to their pow-wows?)

Oh, yeah. I used to go every summer. But this last time was
