

scarf tied around his head and a red blanket around shoulder, red shirt, turquoise necklace, bird wing in his left hand, gourd in his right hand.

Really bouncing up and down. Hair is shoulder length. Dave Farman has on bright blue vest with key designs and rainbow designs on it, made out of some pretty kind of blanket.

Roy Nightwalker: This next special is for Carol Hancock Whitecloud. Most of you know this girl, this young lady. She was Arapaho princess in 1967 at the American Indian Exposition at Anadarko. Won second place in the buckskin dress contest there, and at Barefoot Park just this year won first place, and at Colony this year won first place, and at the Medicine Lodge Peace Treaty Celebration just this year won first place. She works at the present time at the Concho Indian Office. She will be returning to school. She has been going to Southwestern State Teachers College.

Jess says, talking about Henry Bates putting down money: "My brother-in-law--my cousin gave for me--to Saul Birdshead, while we were dancing--he gave him five dollars to our brother-in-law (Saul must be "brother-in-law to both Henry and Jess). Our brother-in-law said, "If it was just one dollar, I was going to charge you four more," he said!

Roy (continuing): ...We was at Medicine Lodge in October. And for some reason we couldn't get next to that mike. The Kiowas had it. And they ran out of time, and we were going to have this special at Colony, today. But the Tia-peh society moved their dance to Anadarko. So we asked Mr. Hicks to have this special here today. We honor this young lady for what she has done for us in Medicine Lodge, Kansas. Also introducing her little boy,
