

to the public--Mitchell Whitecloud, the little boy in costume here. He will be two years old. (Drum rolls) Sunday. And he is inviting you to a dinner at Kingfisher Community hall in his honor. The dinner will be given by his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Holloman Hancock of El Reno. So, you all come down there. Come and break bread with the little Mitchell, celebrating two years in this world. Surely he's gonna make a good dancer.

Clinton: O. K., drummers, you heard these statements. Carolyn needs no introduction. Most of you people know that she has been a winner many many times throughout the state of Oklahoma. She is the granddaughter of Mr. and Mrs. Glen Lumpmouth, well known throughout any place near to Indians.

(War Dance song)

(After song ends) Clinton: The little boy that you see in full war dance costume is the son of the great war dance champion dancer, Johnny Whitecloud. He's also the grandson of another great dancer, Glen Lumpmouth...

Boy: Gladys Nightwalker here is making introduction of her niece, and calling Eva Oldcrow to come up here and see this trophy. (Pause)

Daisy Behan, here, is making introduction of her sister--pledging five dollars to the C. & A Gourd Dancers. ...this trophy. The grandmother here is asking Anna Cross to come and shake hands with her granddaughter.

Calling Minnie Beartrack, introduction made by grandma. Ella Hicks (called).

This gift was sent to you by the mother of this young lady. Glen wants me to say this. This girl was under me at Medicine Lodge. And you know when you get in charge of something, it's nice to try to make good showing--especially in public. Show off our young kids--what they can do in Indian way of life--costume that she has--culture of our Indian people. Five.
