

tribes they used to dress different.

(Did the old people ever say anything about where the Cheyenne came from?)

Well, I told you that book I read about Cheyennes that Timmons brought it over here--told anybody that wants to read it, read it and pass it on.

He give it to one boy--one young man, and I told them I want to read it too. They let me have it. But oh, it was a big book, I got tired of reading. I never finished it. I just finish it--part of it. And I was thinking that I kept it too long. So I just returned it back. At that time I used to still bead and I didn't have time to read it much. The way it says is that they used to live around Mississippi. Then they went on north of Michigan, Minnesota, North Dakota, to South Dakota where the Black Hills. That's where they used to live around there. Araphos and Cheyennes, then they move on to Colorado, Kansas. That's where they used to live, Kansas, and Colorado until they move them.

(How did the Cheyenne people get divided up into the Northern Cheyenne and the Southern Cheyenne? Where they all ever one bunch?)

No, long when I heard them talk about it--Richard (her husband) before he was a very old man--some of them used to live there, and some of them got over here. And they two bunches. They tried to bring them out of the north, but they went back. They didn't like it. Said it was too hot. Get sick and died--too many of them. They went back. They are reservation. That's the way they divide their land. But my cousin was here about two weeks ago. Said, "When we sell our land, we don't sell it to white peoples, we sell it to Indians that got money. So white people not going to live there." But there used to be more Cheyenne, but the white people all--now.

(Is your cousin Northern Cheyenne?)
