

present would you give to him?)

(End of Tape. The remaining portion of this manuscript was taken from hand-written notes.)

Men would give horses to other men. Women gave women articles to other women. Or a man could give money to a man. Each man who picked out a friend would have this friend come and eat with him, or buy him groceries and take them to him. The person who was sent a stick (as invitation) would take a dish--meat or food--to his host. Their main food was meat, and they also had fry bread.

Today the only time the other districts visit us is when they're having a dance for a benefit. People aren't as friendly today. They're living like white men and getting too far apart. They don't want to associate with each other like they used to.

The Barefoot pow-wow started at Old Man Hoof's. This it was moved to the Canton Reserved. Then it moved again--
