

He was captured.

(And was this Old Man Pali, another capture--wasn't he related to these Wares some way?)

No, but he calls himself (that). He's got no Indian blood. No Indian blood. He's a captive. But they live close together there because, and they just like to call themselves brothers. And then the children take it up unknown, and it's like they're kin--it's just like I told you--they accept it as real. But there's no real relation there.

(And there's another man I've heard of from around that area called "Choctaw Bill"-- do you know anything about him?)

Oh yeah. I know when he came in. He first got into the Sankadota family. He married Maggie Sankadoty. And then after a while they separated and he got into this Gus Palmer's mother--Mopope's daughter. Then he live with her till after a while she died and he lived with several other women but didn't have children, and then he finally marry a white woman. He was Choctaw, but after he lived here, so long, he learned to speak good Kiowa. He's Gus Palmer's Father. His real name was Bill Palmer. Yeah, I know him well. (Some irrelevant conversation and end of tape.)
