

he said. So I told him I'd never do it. And this time we had special for him for his life, we had to take his picture. We had it on the table in the center so we could give away for it while they weren't looking at him.

(When was that--was that at a pow-wow?)

Yeah, it was a pow-wow--at Barefoot. And I had Tommy's--I had Warren G. to carry his flag. That was his friend. He carry it around, you know, when we went around.

(When you have a special like that, is it any particular person you like to get to announce for you?)

Oh, just anybody.

(When you do ask someone to announce for you, do you tell them what to say, or do they just say what they want to?)

They know what to say, themselves.

(Some irrelevant conversation)

(What would you have to do--give money?)

Yeah. Well, I ain't got nothing else. I had an extra shawl but I gave it away the other day, and I ain't got any.

(Who would you give money to?)

Oh, some pow-wow committee, or maybe people from different tribe, or something like that.

(I wanted to ask this--these service clubs like this Lewis Howling Buffalo Club--if they had their own songs--if anybody made a special song for them or anything?)

Yeah, we had our own song. And these, they have their song.

(Who makes those songs?)

I don't know--that song we had, my old man made it.
