

Then he told the story how he went to Anadarko town that night and busted the window and got throwed in. So they wouldn't know. His name was Phillip Looking Glass.

(What was Edna's last name?)

Oh, I just forgot--(thinks) Tabananáca, I think. Tabananáca. I'm not sure. Those Comanches can call it to you. They know it.

(How did he kill her?)

I think he struck her with a rock.

(On her head?)

Yes, right there. It was a kind of a sandstone bluff--that's where she was laying. One of those sandstone rocks. He used that.

(Did he ever have to go to jail for it or anything?)

Yes, I think he did for a year or two. I never kept too much track of it.

COMMENTS ON DRAWING NO. 91

It was summer.

(Under there it says "Old Man Eagle Die.")

I don't know of any Indian named "Eagle" in our clan(?)--Eagle Heart. ^{te}.^{ne}.

is Spotted Bird, but they're not dead at that time. They wasn't deat that time. "Eagle"-- There's always got to be some kind of thing attached to that bird, for it's never one name carried as straight "Eagle." It's either "White

Eagle" or Black Eagle" or "Good Eagle" or something like that. "Pretty Eagle."

They always have a word attached to the "eagle." And this single--of course, some of them use it short(ended)--"eagle." But to identify it, they always finish sometime and call it "Good Eagle" or Black Eagle" or something like that.

(Is there any reason for that?)

I'll have to study that. I'll find out what it is--maybe somebody can help me
