

here they were buying silver beads and they were coming this way this afternoon. "We're going to be there hundred per cent." They're from Lawton, and they--they were coming up this way. So, all you singers that are able to sing and all you dancers, you might be getting ready.

MAKES A JOKE ABOUT COMANCHE PERFUME

It takes the Comanche a long time to get ready cause he has to chew the perfume real good, chew it long time; and then, he spit all over himself. He spit that perfume all over his regalia, and it takes--especially, when you don't have much teeth like I have. You can--I can pound these and all that, you know. It takes little longer for Comanche to get ready on account of their Indian perfume I tell a little joke on them Poncas. I look around. They're ain't nobody here. They got several salesmen over there, Indian perfume salesmen. They sell the Indian perfume by bundles. Some of them sell it by bale. You know, they bale it like hay. And they sell it by the bale and sell it by the bundle or application. You know, they chew it for you and spit all over you. (Laughter) It don't cost too much that way, you know. (Speaks in Indian language for about a minute) I think it cost about eighty cents, application. You know, where they chew it and spit it all over you for eighty cents. (Laughter) Bundle, I think it's two and a half. Bale is seven fifty. So, that is the way the Northern people handle their Indian perfume. Boyce, don't record that. You'll get me in trouble with them Poncas. (Laughter) I'm going over there next week so don't get me off. (Interruption) Scalp Dance. That's ladies, all you ladies take part in this Scalp Dance. As we go along, our people are a little slow, and they'll get here by and by. And, so, we're going to start the program. Brother Taylor, will you come up here just for a moment, Brother Know You Band. And we're going to have our invocation, and we're going to have a Flag Song. Then, we're going to go into the Scalp, uh, dancing program. Then, followed by the Gourd Clan. So, we're ready to start the program, and we're go into it now. Brother Taylor will lead us invocation followed by the Flag Song. Thank you.
