

Well, something might have happened around Anadrako similar to this thing.

The men might have died and Blanche might be able to tell you. But the only things I could remember about guts was this story.

(I was trying to ask about these hats they're wearing--do they look like any particular kind of hat to you?)

Not for Indians. Well, the Indian caps they wear don't have no bills. They're made out of otter--those they use at the dances. Otter caps. They just come over the head and around there, but they had ornaments and should have had some feathers on there. But this looks like these little G.E. caps sometimes the soldiers wear. Might be he's trying to distinguish the man, I don't know.

(Let me ask you another question about this Jim Takone and Pea-day fight.

(Drawing No. 99) In this picture, the way they've got it drawn, one of them is a lot bigger than the other one. Would you take a guess as to which one is Takone and which one is Pea-dah?)

This is Takone. Pea-dah is a little short, runt. In the picture he looks like a little bitty boy but he just a runt--real short, thin man. Jim Takone was about six foot tall.

(What do you think he's got in his hand?)

He's got long hair--you notice? And he's got a club and hitting him on the head. Jim Takone, he's the head of the Blackfoot Society. Blackfoot Clan.

(Moving back down then to the next picture (Drawing No. 96); this one is after that "Payment at Mount Scott"--(Drawing No. 97))

Well, we better eat dinner and come back.

(O.K. This one says "Stecker Becomes Agent." (Drawing No. 96.)

Yeah.

(Interruption for dinner. Interview resumes)

Yeah. That's the beginning of Stecker's administration. How come Stecker to be Agent?
