

got together, all the men that were going to kill buffaloes and camp close to it, to try to capture that wolf boy. And they did and they listen and the wolves came and they heard that man talking to the wolf. And he said, "There's a good one over here--good bones." And the men got a rope and got all around him and they all gathered up around him and then the wolves run off and he run off, but they roped him and got him. Captured him. They said he fought like a wolf--fight. Finally they subdued him and tied him up. Well, they said they want his story. And they said he hurt a lot of fellows. He hurt a lot of people when they try to capture him. He already had the wolf nature. He just bit and everything, tore them up. They ask him how come him to be in that shape. They wanted his story. That's the way he told it. He said, "We was out isolated in a camp way off by ourselves. And the woman, I guess, told you I died. She's the one that's the cause of it. She dug the hole under my pallet and had a rawhide over it. When I fell in she tacked the rawhide over it and put dirt and grass over it. And the wolves came around and jerked the hide off the top and felt sorry for me and pulled me out of the hole, and they even doctored me." "Your wife's still living," they said. And he said he didn't want her. They asked if he wanted to come back and live with the tribe again. He said, "I'll have to ask my daddy." The big wolf. So he went and asked his daddy. On one condition he let him go--that they get a lot of the insides of the buffalo--entrails and what they call those --inside of buffalo--paunch. And lot of those insides of the buffalo that's used to put meat in--baloney (intestines). "Load her up with that raw meat," he said. "The insides of buffalo. Have it all over--have her put it on her and bring her out one night and push out her out and say, 'There she is!' And then we'll take care of her." And she pleaded for her life, but they wouldn't listen to her. They load her up with those buffalo entrails and took her out there where the carcass was, in the evening, late evening. They said
