

had the tribe the Camp Creek people had a stand there to raise funds, through maybe..anyway, they had a little stand there, and the woman of one of the heirs of the ten heirs on one family, raised cain about..she wanted to sell.. well the people were selling that soda pop at ten cents, and she wanted to sell hers at fifteen cents and they won't buy it from her. Boy she raised..and everything else. Well, they had no trouble, they just moved from there. As I recall there always has been a dance down there until that time, about three four years ago. Far as I can remember.

-(Where is Camp Creek, exactly?)

You know where I live? Well that corner south from here you go west from there just follow that road, you'll come to a building, a house with a flagpole in front. Like I say, they left that place about a few years ago, never use it. But from that grass house Oh, I'd say about 250 yards down used to be the original dance ground. Had a grass house there, had a big round arbor. It was a good size grass house, about forty feet in diameter..and the arbor, it was larger.

(Is that still there?)

No, some drunk burned that grass house down. I guess..I don't know the reason why, but they never replaced. They take a lot of work, building a grass house. These three grass houses out there (at Indian city) my wife and I were the instructors..

(Didn't the museum (Southern Plains) used to have a grass house?)

Yea, when Jack (Schweitzer) was here we built a grass house and an arbor, but some kids got that, got a matchstick and lit that thing and there it was. All the time we spent on it, and the money we spent.

LIFE HISTORY DATA:

(Frank, I'd like to ask you some questions about your own life, about what you remember from your younger days. You say you were born in 1904?)

Yes.
