

Mama used to have, it's real funny. The year mama died this Indian woman always came every year, see mother. And us kids would get on a long bench, in the dining room. And act-try to talk Cherokee. But we couldn't.

(Granny Wolf?)

No, that's what I don't know what her name was. The next year when she came back, brother Hur and I, we tried to do what mama did, we gave her money and she ate with us. But she never came back anymore. Now, who she was I don't know.

(Well, this lady Granny Wolf couldn't speak anything but just Cherokee.)

Well, that there she talk Cherokee. I don't believe, I'm like you. That's a good picture of the monument. And you see this is his daughter, by her second marriage. Married Preacher Dodson.

(What was her name now? On those tombstones, what was the name?)

Annie, Aunt Annie.

(Who?)

The daughter that married Dodson.

(What was her name?)

Amy. Aunt Amy, ah-hum.

(What was her last name?)

Amy Ross. She was by the second marriage, you know. See, his second marriage was see his first, grandmother's mother died on the boat they came down on the boat.

(Quadie something like that.)

Ah-hum, Quadie.

(Quadie?)

Quadie. And she is buried at Little Rock, Arkansas. So that was February
