

plenty to do if I ever get it all done. So therefore, see the house used to be clear out there. Come around here and see the old fireplace. See, there's that fireplace, the chimney you saw when my daddy and my youngest sister. Did you say you can get me one of those books?

(I believe we can. We want one for ourselves so we'll try to get one.)

Yeah, I sure we had one and it got burnt.

(Sometimes, they are out of print and can't get anymore.)

I can dig up about Emily, I'm gonna look up that name. Now, she was the granddaughter of Andrew Ross, wasn't she? That I was reading about.

(I can't remember all the names.)

And I said, well, I believe I can run that down in that Meyer's reunion.

I have it. I call that trumpet tree, and some of them had another name for it. And I said, I'm not that far wrong. But I've got (not clear) I'll show you where her grave is. All of them.

(Is she the one that wrote that article?)

Yeah, ah-hum. That was during, you see---during the P.I. or W.P.A. stuff or whatever you call it, then.

(Yeah, that, what is this, 'is too.)

And that is what it is too, isn't it? And we've got all this stuff right here, haven't we. I'll leave that there. Yeah! We can go up there.

(Well, if you aren't too tired.)

Kinda steep.

DISCUSSES ROSS CEMETERY (ON SITE)

That is the son of Uncle Bob, that we were talking about, up in that chimney. And here is his other son.

(Daniel, Daniel _____ Nave.)

And that's his mother there, and over here. And I said, when they settle the estate, they ought to be forced to buy a stone for Uncle Bob Nave, cause he hasn't got no stone, when you see those flowers. Yes I think it's----
