

That's a lot up there. Over in, He died in 18--.

(170?)

1870, wasn't it? Ah-hum and here is my little brother here, and my--this is Andrew John, Aunt Bitty, little boy. Grandma's youngest daughter, see, she had five children by marriage. The youngest one, was just little over two years old when he wanted go with the old run a merchant, you know. Some of them call, might be foul play, maybe he tried to cheat somebody out of something, and let him have it.

(Well, there was a John Nave, died when he was thirty-three years old?

From some illness, I read that article out of the paper, from the name, John Nave.)

John Nave?

(John Nave.)

Just lately, you mean.

(No, it was I guess it was that stuff, that you gave out, here at the cottage. A little article out of the paper, it says John Nave, and had two little children. He's thirty-three.)

That's the one I guess is buried at the (not clear), I guess. Some of them are buried up there.

(It didn't say when he died of said, just some illness.)

You say that was lately?

(No, it was, I guess it was some of those paper, that you gave up there at the cottage. It was an article.)

No! Her she is down---that's her grand---read it.

(I can't hardly read it. John Ross.)

John Golden Ross.

(Oh!)
