

end of the rawhide (rope) is wrapped around his neck. Afterwards this man, Raymond Harris, is wrapped around with a quilt. And also the quilt is been tied with a rawhide (rope), wrapped around to where he's tied airtight with a quilt. And it comes to a point to where there's a place--sage--sagebrush is made of a bed, pallet, where this man lays. So it goes on to where this man lays ahead of him--there's a cedar fireplace where they begin. Cedar is in order to fumigate the house, which is airtight. The windows and the doors are enclosed with canvas--airtight. And the lights are turned off, where the house is pitch dark. And it goes on further to where this man is fenced around with a twine string tied to position of four gallon cans half filled with red paint dirt. The four cans are in position to hold four corners, fence, with this red paint--filled (half-filled) with half red paint. And these little pouches consist of tobacco pouches tied about two inches apart all the way around where this man lies. And it goes on to where--while the man is doing the doctoring is being tied up with rawhide, both hands tied, as I said before, and legs, and again his quilt, like I said before--just before the doctoring is started a ceremonial of any kind among the Indians--especially among the Arapahoes--a ceremony is started with a pipe smoke. With entire group of people. Beside there being women present among this crowd of doctoring. Besides those people being doctored brought dry goods, some silver dollars, in payment to the doctor as the ceremony proceeds. The ropes are tied and the lights, as I said before, are turned out. Pitch dark. Four gourds are laid down beside the man that's tied up. And the four gourds is made of rawhide. Rocks as rattles for the gourds. And the eagle is mounted on the wall becomes a reality among our Indians. The gourds are in there rattling all over with the spirits in motion of doctoring. And as the doctoring is in motion we have four drums among the four men, and I, Jim Warden, was lucky to have one of the drums that I would help to sing. And as the doctoring goes on we sing four Sun Dance songs. And in the beginning of the doctoring, it starts--the doctoring of the spirits starts with the east side of the room. Consists of
