

(Sings another song, Number 74. Church Song.)

That was my boy's song. Before he start preaching he used to sing it. And the words say: "Thank the Lord, He's given me the scriptures." And then the second verse says, "Thank the Lord. He's given me light." Lewis Howling Buffalo made that. Yeah, just two verses to it. I know lot of them. These old Indians used to make--but I don't know--I'll sing some more some other time.

(Do you remember any hand game songs now?)

Let's see--what hand game song shall I start with--?

(Sing another song, Number 75, Hand Game Song.)

Now--that be enough. No, that doesn't have any words. It's an old song.

(Sings another song, Number 76. Hand Game Song.)

(Is that an old time song, too?)

Old time. They're all old ones. Yeah. No words. Let's see--I don't hardly sing these--I just know a few. My boys know all of them.

(Sings another song, Number 77. Hand Game Song.)

(Now that had words--what did they say?)

They say, "Bring my feather. I'm gambling."

(Could you say those words real slow in Arapaho?)

(Repeats Arapaho words)

(Sings another song, Number 78. Hand Game Song.)

(Now that one had words in it, didn't it?)

Yeah, words. You know that bean you hide? The bean. "The bean--I threw it! I holler at it!" Yeah, they--

(You mean like he threw it from one hand to the other?)

No. Just like it flew away while he was playing. "It flew away and I holler at it!"

(Could you say those Arapaho words real slow?)

(Arapaho words repeated slow, but not transcribed.)

(How do you just say that bean?)

(Repeats Arapaho terms with translations.)

Gosh, there's lot of good songs. I wish I could sing all of them. Maybe I'll study them. They'll come to me.

(Have they been having many hand games around here?)
