

married. And, when she died, he had to sign her birth certificate, and we each volunteer...her funeral bill was $600...and we volunteer to help my son-in-law. And after all, that was our daughter, but he was supposed to pay all. But we felt that she was our daughter, that we should...you know, help. So he paid $150 and I paid $150, and we paid half. And three hundred, our son-in-law worked and paid that. Well, they wrote him a letter and told him to send $150 to the office. And we couldn't...he couldn't understand...we couldn't make him understand that he had to pay $150 to the office so the funeral bill could be paid. Well, my renter did the same thing. He paid $150 to the office and they paid the funeral bill. I could of gone and taken a check to the funeral bill and paid it. That's why we ran short this last year, because we had to take three hundred dollars out of our lease money to pay our daughter's bill. But we weren't sorry, we knew we done something for her. So now that the little girl got married, oh, she's got a man working real hard right now, working every day. And my son-in-law working up to Claremore, he's working in construction up there. And he was home last night, he comes and see about us, how we get along. That's how come we ran short, last year. Well, we didn't mind it we get along the best way. It does, but...we felt like we done something. Because she was a lot of help to us when she lived. (Where are your two daughters?)

My two girls, Cecelia and Margarite...they taking this little boy to the University. They been gone since the 10th. He's supposed to go under surgery.

(Do they live around here?)

Well, my daughter Cecelia...she lives here, she's not married. But my daughter lives up there at that white house. She's on welfare...she's got all these children. But during the summer, we keeping all these boys so they could help us around, you know. We pay them, we give them something.

(Does your daughter have any land?)

No, none of them has land. None of them. Like this one, right here, he got killed on December 12th, in an accident, southeast of Carnegie, and he left five children, too. And he was a help to us too, he was working at Sequoyah. Supporting his family.
