

My people used it. Well, it's my grandmother's brother, he used it, maybe twice, I don't know. I would say about twice. He used it, among the Comanches. I don't know who it was. There was some people...France, yea, France...he used it over there. I'd like to know how it worked. But they sang song. And I think they smoke it, kind of...give away, you know, for whatever they visiting. Tribes, you know...Comanches. I think they supposed to gather a child. Some relatives, you know. They pick up a child. I don't know how they do it, but they always pick a child, and they sang, I think. One guy said it at one time. Well, there's a pipe dance, but Wichitas we call it...the song, they call it Child Song. See, they picking up a child. I guess when that's over, they kind of have a give-away. Then when they dance, I don't know whether the group dances, but they have, ah, two ... well, they call them Tail Dancers. I don't know, I guess they dressed about like them, you know, they wear bells, feathers. But they carry, oh, I don't know, a stick, a bow like that. Well, it's a bow all right, it's a stick, It's got a string across there. They have a eagle feathers on that. My uncle, you know, he fixed one. He just showing it. How it was fixed, if someone wants to fix. That's what they carry, them two. I don't know, I guess they motion with it. I didn't see it, my people just telling that.

So when they pick the child up, I don't know, I guess he's kind of, they pick a child up, it puts him in the relatives, you know, to these visiting people. So after that's over, you know, they get horses, blankets, oh, anything. And this, like that, everything. And they get their car then, start back, you know. My grandmother's brother, I seen a lot of fine horses from back, over that a way. Bunch of them. That's about all there was to it. Well, it's a ceremony, a ceremony. That is all our dancers, a ceremony. Then, ah...well, this man...he wasn't my grandfather, he just raised me...my grandmother, she married this old man. He was a Kichai. He wore bobbed hair, you know. He tell me went to a doctor dance.

DOCTOR DANCE

Doctor dance. That's a group. Oh, they have Songs, but I don't
