

Well, our agency and the welfare, they work together. And they got behind that. Any child, ain't in school, well they go. I've even heard, one man...more than one...they put him in jail because his children wouldn't go to school. And then when they do come out, that helped. And then if there is a child that just don't care to go to school, just don't want to go to school, they take him to some of these little institutes. Sometime, we got some children that are bad, you know. Just want to run around, especially when they get started running around with boys. They have to take them.

EMPLOYMENT FOR INDIANS

(Another thing you hear a lot about is this business about jobs here in Anadarko?)

Well, I always think that they give them jobs. Now some may not think that way, I don't know. But it's the person, they giving jobs to, they go just so long, and then they quit. I think that's the main. There's some that are willing, looks like, to work, those the ones they wouldn't hire. That's the funny thing of it. But I know, they always say, one man, for instance, one man here, they give him a job, and he work so long, maybe a year or so, and then he quits. Next thing you know, you hear, he's working somewhere, then he quit. He's got a good job here, he works at a service station. He's got a wife, and maybe five children. And his wife is a nice woman, goes to church every Sunday, and Wednesday prayer meeting. Any church work to be done, she's there. Nice woman. And he works around like that, that's the man I was talking about. Well, here not long ago, I think it's two weeks ago. I said, I want to go into town and get me something, so they took us. We all went. Late in the evening, Saturday evening, we got to this corner, and my granddaughter said, oh, look, is that Bowman's car. When we got close to it, it was a carload, and he was sitting in the front seat...somebody else was driving. He was sitting in the front seat. I guess he had passed out, and they were just holding him up. When we got into town, I looked for his wife, and I never did find her.
