

We can't look after everything, we try to. We was coming from town one time, and she said look at them boys. She stopped, she wasn't on duty. She said, what you got in that sack, Two big quarts of beer. Give it here. She turn them in the office. We was on our way coming home, and she turned them in. Two, three times she did that, took drinks away from kids. They really thought lot of her, so they told her if she ever comes back from Germany she can have her job back.

Well, she said, you know they got buildings (Riverside school), and they have a big tunnel like, across underneath. One time, she said, we was cleaning up the other building. She said let's clean up under there, and oh, she said all the blankets and things that were taken down there. Awful, beer bottles and cans. They'd be down there where you couldn't hear them. After we caught up with them, they didn't go again.

You know, my granddaughter's...we used to call her, she's a tomboy. Oh, she's stout. And one of these boys tried to fight her once, boy she flopped him.

(Where do these kids get beer and liquor here in Anadarko?)
Well, they go to town, and maybe they get somebody to get it for them.

(Are there places here in town where children can buy it?)

Huh, uh. They can't. They're not supposed to. But somebody gets it for them. It's the same way, down there. Now here, first part of the year, I think, when they first started school, there's a boy went and killed another boy, down there at Ft. Sill School, only they were out, away from the school. They were out. Got into a fight over one of the girls, I guess, and one got stabbed to death. They expelled the boy.

TREATMENT OF INDIANS BY POLICE

(How about the police department here in Anadarko?)

Well, they watch, but like I said, they're tricky, sneak around. But they watch. There's times somewhere if they get drunk, you know, get too wild, they throw them in jail. But usually the school, somebody goes after them, it's that way down there, at the school. Course, I know all about over there mostly because my daughter works there, and she tells us what has happened,
