

But that boy used to like to wet the bed. Mother used to always fix his bed next to the door, she'd say it could air out easy. Another bed over there. I remember my grandma and I was on the inside, on the southeast side. And all the rest...we had ...and somebody said where was your kitchen, and I said, the fireplace. What did you all eat, I said. We had a big old canvas, mother would have it just thrown down. Maybe an old table cloth. And I said we had pie tin plates, and we just throw them around and never break them. And tin cups to drink out of. Kind of dishes we had. Old spoons, cheap spoons in those days, we had them.

I told them, I said we got along fine. Mother raised a big family. Now these two brothers, I said, when he came down, he had five children with him. And my brother and I, and I had two... a twin brother and sister... We were already in that home. And there was two boys...that was my grandmother's nephews. Her sister died, and they didn't have no father...must have been illegitimate children. There was two boys, and she brought them down. And this boy that liked to wet the bed. I bet there was about fifteen or sixteen children of us...in that same house, we all used to eat together.

And mother used to put up a tipi outside. She'd always stay in there. Her brother and somebody else. But I always slept with my grandma. We got along all right.

And then he had a younger wife again after this other one died. Then he got him another one again. And they also, they just had one child. And then she died, and then the old man died last. He died of old age. Well, he's allotment was (under the name of) Tadewah, I think, I think that's the way he spell it. Anyway, they cut it short after allotment time. His Indian name was tadewasidiraedi. And when they allotted him, they said
