

Right west of a white man's pasture. That used to be an Indian's land.

I think it belonged to--I don't know who it belonged to. Anyhow there was a camp there and that's where we were camping.

(Now where was that from Barefoot Park?)

South. You know where Warren G.'s house is--and that little house sets east of him--straight south. And there's a house there, right straight across the road. Jim Haigler's place. That's where we were camping at that time.

USE OF HER MONEY FROM LAND SALE

(Do you remember how much you got for that south eighty you sold?)

Thirty-five.

(Thirty-five hundred?)

Yeah. And I bought two teams and a wagon and harness and two tents and a cooking stove and a heater. And then a plow and a disc and cultivator and harrow and mowing machine. All that. You know at that time they weren't high. And then I had about four hundred left and that's what we lived on for a while. After buying all that stuff, that's what I had left. And of course sometimes when he'd run out of feed I'd have to buy hay and oats, but he was working all the time, earning money.

(Did your husband have any land?)

He had land--in the jacks (blackjacks) there where Judson (Hudson) lived, on the north side road. In the blackjacks--that's where his land was. He sold it. And you know how much he sold it for? Eight hundred. That's all. That's all he got.

(When was that that he sold it?)

He sold his after I sold mine--same year, but after I sold mine, he sold it.
