

(Who rented that eighty acres where they used to put wheat--was that his uncle's land?)

His aunt's. And he used to give her a third of whatever the wheat makes.

(Let's see if I understand this--she had one hundred and sixty?)

She had one hundred and sixty acres.

(And your husband farmed eighty?)

Yeah.

(And then she leased the other eighty?)

No. It was pasture land. We used to turn our horses in there.

(Well, what was that eighty you said they rented for wheat farming?)

That was his aunt's eighty.

(Then whose land was it that he was farming himself?)

His uncle's.

(O.K. I'll finally catch on. When you leased your eighty, then--did you all just farm it one year?)

We farmed it just one year. And it was too hard for the kids, and I had to watch them.

(How many did you have at that time?)

Two--Rosie and Lewis. Lewis was the baby.

(Well, when you leased it then, after you moved away--how much did you get in the way of income from income from it?)

I used to get two hundred and fifty a year. For eighty acres, yeah.

MYRTLE DEEDING HER LAND TO HER CHILDREN

(And then how long after that did you deed it over to your kids?)

Oh, about two years after that. Two years after that. Lewis was two years old and Hannibal was a baby.

(I see. So you deeded it to Rosie and Lewis and Hannibal?)
