

fifteen--soldiers--all Indian.

Did they have uniforms?)

Yeah, you know that kind of--I believe in the Number One War, what kind of clothes he's got that time? (Yes.) Some kind of yellow; got a little something here (on calves of legs) got a string like put around his legs. That's the kind he wears, that time.

(What was their job while they were soldiers?)

Their job? Well, I tell you just all it is, is fighting, that's all.

(Fighting bandits?)

Yeah. No, it's not bandits, it's soldiers. Well, it's just like you hear about 'round here long time ago, they call 'em "blue." Some of 'em have blue clothes on, and some of 'em red clothes on. And they fight together. Something like that over there, that time. Both Mexican. Way I learned, they call 'em "Carranza"--that what the Indians fight. But this Indian, here, they call 'em "Madero." That's why they come from government. That Carranza, he's just like outside. He's not government. That's what they're fighting. But I think he's quit now. I haven't heard about it any more. There used to be lots of 'em down there, when I was younger, when I was little, and they just went to hunting, you know, and campground, and old kids, and women like that, and hunting. Man was camped around there. There was a Mexican coming, a soldier. Sometime he wants to trade horses, maybe wants to buy horses. When they didn't sell it to him he just take it, anyhow. That's what they said, long time ago. That's that bad one, you know.

(What was his name?)

They call him "Colorado." That's what they call him. That's that kinda bad one, you know. But the other one, they call him "Madero." That's just like you work for government, Mexican government, that Madero, but that Colorado, he's not.

(Did they get paid?)

Yeah, that fellow that work for government, he get paid, but the other one, I don't know about that. Oh, he's getting money when they rob someone. That's
