

Yeah, catch them.

(Yeah.)

They throw them which--just like having a--they have a place--well, they call it--when it goes their line--just like, say, you had a saying, "There's water there." (Wichita Indian word), you know, they say that, (Wichita Indian word).

(Will you say that again?)

When they score, they say, (Wichita Indian word)

(Once more.)

(Wichita Indian word)

(Will you say it once more?)

(Wichita Indian word)

(And that means there's---)

That means, well, it means that they saw it in the water when they score.

(I see.)

But they don't have no water there. It's just a word meaning that they score, (Wichita Indian word), you know.

(Okay. What--what--what kind of ceremony do they have before they start?)

Well, somebody--just like a hand game, you know, you ask that man up there, you know, "We're doing this," you know. We're going to play.

(Yeah.)

Nobody get tired, or nobody get hurt, you know. You get hurt any time in game, you know. Maybe, somebody make a mistake, you know, then, they--then when their sticks might hit somebody--stick somebody in the eye. You know, they--they pay for that, you know. Nobody get hurt.

(Yeah.)
