

Our boundary would have been the Washita River and east boundary Arkansas and the west boundary the Rio Grande, and I don't know what river would have been the north boundary. Anyhow it would have run into Colorado. Think how much. Oklahoma, Kansas, and Colorado. three states. When the government asked the Indian how much land you want, well he said, "We are going to relay three horses. Each horse is going to run three days, And the third day he must stop there. And another one is going to run three days. There going to be three horses, and they're going to run clear into Colorado." I don't know whoever thought of that idea, but he must have been an awful smart old Indian. You know that was a vast tract of land if you would stop and walk across it. Well, my people they don't want no allotment act. They came and the government approached them to make them sign an agreement that they are going to take this allotment act. There was a man, he said. we had seven chiefs, seven. I wish I knew all their names, but that was too far back. I don't know them. And anyhow these seven and how don't know how they used to cast their votes, and I guess they came to the conclusion they were going to refuse. They don't want no attlotment act. For there was a man, named Sitting Bull, he died here about, I'll say 15 years ago, probably longer, he's the man that told these chiefs, "Just go ahead, go ahead, sign it. In seven years there's going to be a judgement day." Where in the world is that judgement day today? Man he's a man, he told them chiefs to go ahead and sign it. "We're going to get our money. In seven years there's going to be a judgement day. The Christ going to come and claim his own." Where is it? Today liquor stores, beer joints, marijuana. Then they use needles, taking them pills, getting that effect.
