

They go to singing their own songs. Their own traditional songs. They'll sing there to give these four clans time to run on home to their tents and get on full regalia. And they start from Fox Clan will start from--they all go together to their leader's shade or to their tents. And they take their full regalia and get dressed over there. Same way with the Tomahawks. They go to their southwest-- And this Dog Clan will not take part, so part of this bunch will excuse the old people, because they're old. They already done their part of putting this up. They will excuse them to come to the south and to the north and come in through here. They sit here in the line of this--right inside. That's the doorway there. The Dog Clan will depart from here (northwest side)--part of them will remove themselves to come to the south side. Part of them will come to this side, and to enter here--the women folks here, and the menfolks here.

(Men on the south side of the entrance; women on the north side of the entrance.)

(These women are wives of Dog Clan men?)

Yeah, wives of Dog Clan men. Then this here will remain singing while these get on full regalia. They come back and start singing the entrance song of the Sun Dance. They have songs for that--(sings introduction to a song). That's when they all come in--from four directions. I have them songs. They'll come in and there will be a leader in each group. He'll ride a horse--white horse. He'll ride a white horse--whether it's a white horse or a colored horse--each clan leader will ride a colored horse. But this Fox Clan, they're always noted to ride a spotted horse. This Fox Clan. Just the leader. He's the only one that's eligible to be riding a spotted horse, of that clan--the Fox Clan. Then, when they call come in, this bunch will come in first. They'll be along in here somewhere--this bunch here--r. And when this bunch comes in, they'll be from this pole here to the doorway; and then when this bunch--younger guys--will come into the doorway, and they'll be on this side here, and the Tomahawks will come in and they'll be along in here, and the inside--you've seen the Sun Dance up there? The
