

And it come clear over here. And then there was another big building over there. That's where them boys used to practice-- there was some buildings over here but they're all gone.

(Was the town of Canton over there, too?)

No. You know, Canton was built in 1905. But this had been here long time. They used to have a long, long barn there, and they used to train mules and horses. And then they used to take them up west of where we live, on the hill. They used to train them... There was a building over here, too. That was a building where they used to keep all the harness and what they used to use on them mules and horses. Oh, and when they all ride on horseback, you know--they had funny saddles. They used to drill, the soldiers. There was white men and there was colored and some of them, they said they were Irishmen. I seen them when I was a little girl. I used to be afraid of them.

That's where they used to get--when they're going to have checks, they used to go in there. There was a little office.

(Another building on the east side of this one?)

Yeah. It was stone, too. You know I would be afraid to be under that house. Maybe them things always fall. Dr. Hart used to live over here. And then the next house was a store and then on the other side of it was where Mr. Mitchell used to live-- Bill Mitchell--that old white man that always be among Indians. Frances Trimmell always be keeping him.

(We're west of that barracks building, and this--over there used to be what?)

There used to be a store next to this one. And then on the other side there was another big building--that was Mr. Mitchell's house. ... There was a man by the name of Abernathy that run that store. He used to have pretty shawls and blankets. They weren't very high. These Pendleton blankets, we used to get them for six dollars, and then them thin wool ones, they used to just be four dollars--and some three and a half. That was when I was a girl--1902.
