

go in there! So he opened it. I guess he knocked on that head. He said, "Hey! What you all having in there? I want to come in. Can I come in?" And they said, "Yeah, come in. You're welcome," they said. He said, "Where shall I get in at?" "There's a hole there on the side! Get in through there!" they said. So he crawled in. See, he was big, Sainday. He went in and there was bunch of mouse in there. They were having a dance, you know. He got in there, you know. He try to cheat that mouse. He was going to get that head someway. I don't know what he was going to do with that head, but he was after them mouse, too. So at the same time he (had) changed with that bird his "soap." (penis), you know. So when he got in there. And when he got in there, them mouse, too, they were wise and they said, "Hey, that's Sainday! We better run!" So they all took off, and they left him in there. They said, "What you want in here?" And he said, "I just come to see you all's dance." he said. So when he got in there, he couldn't get out no way, you know, Sainday. He was stuck in there. And he thought about his wife. He said, "Oh, I bet my old lady's waiting on me. I bet she's worried. I never come back yet." He listened good. He heard somebody--a noise up the creek. You know, a bunch of them were swimming--women's and boys. So I guess he kept going making his way towards that place where they were swimming. And every now and then he comes out of that water you know. Pretty soon some of the kids seen it and said, "Hey lookie there! Something's coming down stream!" "Yeo!" They said. That's like saying "Gee, I'm afraid!" And they all run. Somebody was talking in that head. He said, "Hey, you all! You all knock me in the head," he said. "Split my head open. I got to get out. I just got married. I got to go see my wife." They hit that buffalo on the head-that skull, I guess, and
