

Uh-huh, very few girls ever get into it--mostly boys. But it's because of the girl's, mostly.

(Oh is it?)

It's whether they are going with a certain boy or not.

(Do the girls have any part starting the boys...in arguing with each other?)

Lot of times they do. They go there with one boy and then when they get there they try to go with another boy and then that's when the trouble begins.

(I can see very well that kind of trouble! Well, what about if a boy and girl are just going together. Would they ever just go and just stay with each other the whole night?)

Uh-huh. Yeah, you kind say, the average, about 3 out of 5 couples that will stay together.

(Well, do the girls just ever go by themselves?)

Oh yes, lot of them go by themselves.

(And boys too?)

...and boys too. But they seem like they take it for granted. The boy or the girl I mean--if you are with one one night well, the next night that you go, you try to be with somebody else. Well, that's where your trouble starts too.

(So if you were going with one boy and you went to the dance with him that first night and then, the second night if you went with somebody else after the dance, that would cause trouble?)

Uh-huh, that might cause trouble.

(Well, the way that the Forty-nine dances are, the way you've been describing it how long has it been this way? You know, how long has it been a dance mainly for the teenagers and young people?)

Oh, let's see I'd say about since 1940.

(Well, do the Indian young people, do they refer to go to the Forty-nine dances rather than some other kind of dances like rock-an-roll or something like that?)
