

enjoy themselves.

(Well, you know if a girl goes to a dance by herself, does she usually get asked to dance by somebody?)

Uh-huh, she usually gets asked or wither--maybe there's just a friend, just a friend of hers that she knows, and she'll get in and dance by this friend.

(Well, can she ever get in by herself?)

Uh-huh, she can get in by herself.

(Would she ever dance with more than one boy during the evening?)

Oh, there's some of these girls--well some of them--they go out there--mostly trouble makers--and they try to make their rounds with these boys--try to dance with them.

(How could they do this?)

Well, it's usually they have lot more to drink and they have courage to go up and go and get in between this boy and this girl.

(Oh--yeah, that would cause trouble!)

There's a very few, though. Once in awhile you run into something like that, but not all the time.

(Well, would a girl ever--though not to make trouble, but because she likes some boy--would she ever go over and start dancing by ni? Some ody that she likes or knows?)

Well, yeah--she would--I did! That was during the Walter's Pow-Wow. When I first met Harold. (Harold Neconie is now Ella Lou's husband.)

(Tell me about this?)

Oh, you know all about it! Oh well, he was going with somebody else at that time, and I was too. So, he was in that Forty-Nine. He was in there with some friends of his, and this girl that he had brought. Well, she was pretty well fixed up. He was dancing and she was out to the car drinking. So, he came in there and she wanted to talk to him. Well, at first, this girl that he was dancing with--well, they got out of the Forty-Nine and they pulled him out too. So,
