

So he didn't have nothing to eat but bones. So he sure was mad!

He said, "Boy, I sure thought I was smarter than him, but," he said,

"It looks like he out-smarted me this time," he said.

(Evelyn comments that you always hear old people sing the prairie dog song that Able was singing in his story. Another segment of T-71 is played.)

He is talking about this sun, you know. He said there was a bunch of these people who wanted to outsmart him, you know. So he curious about how come it's been so dark at this certain place. There is never no daylight. It is always dark. You could just see so far once in a while--something like a daybreak. Well, all this time these other ones--I guess there are coyotes that have that sun. They're the ones run with that sun. And he was trying to get hold of it. This Sainday was trying to get hold of that sun. He said, "Well, we are going to have a race," he said, "With that thing." Well, all this time they had it prepared, you know--them coyotes, you know. They had everything to run with. They didn't want Sainday to get hold of it. So he said, "All right," he said, "We are going to start," he said. So one of these coyotes said, "All right." He had already told his buddies, you know, how they were going to run. It was something like a relay, you know. They carry that stick. So they didn't want Sainday to get in on it. But anyway he wanted to get in on it. So they started running. So one of these coyotes, he keeps throwing that, you know, sun. So every time Sainday get close to grab it, well, someone always pick it up. First time it was two coyotes that run with it and the next time just about the time he gets over there and gonna reach it a bird picked it up. Same way for three times--a bird picked it up. Last one he barely made it there, Sainday, and he grabbed it, you know. He grabbed that sun.
